NATHALIE DOMINGO

Nathalie Domingo is a ceramic artist who works slip cast porcelain in an uninhibited way. She does not hesitate to push the clay around, layering fine trails of liquid porcelain which are sprinkled with sand or alumina beads for her vegetal sculptures, as well as including intense texture and substance in her wall panels. She fires and re-fires porcelain to its limit, until it tears apart. Her techniques enable her to express texture, colour, and delicacy in unique and sensuous ways.

JOURNEY

After having discovered the works of Ousmane Sow on the Pont des Arts in Paris, Nathalie Domingo decides to enroll in sculpture classes and a few years later includes a ceramic course.

Trained at the Institute of Ceramics in Sèvres (2002-2003), Domingo follows the classes of visual artist Carole Chebron in particular where she is introduced to porcelain. "Carole is a demanding professor and artist, she led me to discover that ceramics, and porcelain in particular, could be a material requiring unlimited research." Clay becomes a space of freedom and experimentation for her. After her training, Domingo continues her research into slip cast porcelain. In 2007, she meets Victorio Serio, a famous cabinetmaker who offers her her first solo exhibition in his studio-gallery at rue de Montreuil in Paris.

INSPIRATIONS AND INFLUENCES

Nathalie Domingo mainly draws her inspiration from nature: notably the textures of barks, mosses and lichens, colors of old stones... In her studio, she also works to build bridges between the worlds of ceramics and cooking, and does not hesitate to incorporate food ingredients in porcelain.

Today, four artists influence the creative process of Nathalie Domingo: Pierre Soulages for its black and large paintings; Peter Lane for his monumental ceramic creations; Claude Champy for his unconventional approach to ceramics; and Land Art artist Andy Goldsworthy, for his relationship with nature.

CREATIVE PROCESS

Although it is extremely challenging to master, the slip cast porcelain is a medium of choice for Domingo as it generously offers infinite creative possibilities.

What makes her work unique is the way she uses a slip-trailer. She changes it from its primary use to develop a work of extreme delicacy. Guided by the dance between her hand and the flow of the slip, she begins to layer one porcelain filament over another, until the relief appears... Repeating the gesture is a key feature of her work. It leads her to an almost hypnotic state, through which the introspection can take place: the created piece then appears as a reflection of the artist's state of mind at the time of its completion. The knowledge of the filament technique, combined with the repeated gestures, progressively allow Domingo to exonerate herself from technical constraints. She observes the various possibilities offered by the clay, tries to capture them and makes them her own. The process is both soothing and demanding. It requires a constant concentration, as the filament breaks easily. Moisture, room temperature, air, hand pressure on the slip-trailer and arm position must be considered. Through multiple experiments, the artist refines her knowledge of the material, and is able to freely create surprising pieces. In a perpetual search for textures, Domingo tries to push the boundaries of her works, transcend the clay, but also extend the field of creative possibilities.

WORKS

Echo sculptures

The Echo sculptures were created for the Kapfenberg 4th International Biennial, in Austria (2005). The pieces are at the root of the filament work developed by Domingo. Inspired by the painting of Nicolas Poussin, Echo and Narcissus, she makes three big sculptures in porcelain filaments. She also adds minerals to vary the texture and color that will mark the different stages of Echo's body fossilization. She was awarded the Biennial Prize for these three works. Other works on the same topic followed: tinted porcelain, sprinkled with sand and alumina beads. The interpretations are always incredibly varied: submarine items, corals, algae... Nature is honored.

Wall panels

Started in 2008, the Dream Catchers are murals discs made of porcelain filaments. These works bear homage to Native American ritual objects that protect sleep from evil spirits. They hang on the walls in the manner of a tondo. Working on the relationship between surface and volume, Nathalie Domingo is particularly interested in wall panels, which she considers as a limitless expression space combining architecture and art. As in the work A Taste of Chaos (190 x 200 cm), exhibited in 2010 at the Museum of Decorative Arts in Paris, which consists of thousands of black porcelain filaments patiently drawn one by one. After this long and meticulous process, the artist's gesture is free up, and she can start working on the clay texture, with a knife, a brush, a finger, or wide gestures, to create intense cracked effects. Finally, Domingo does not hesitate to increase the relief by breaking, layering, firing again and again the porcelain panels to their limits, in order to get a unique work. These panels offer a wide range of possibilities and are compatible with many projects. With a hanging system developed by the artist, the installations are available in large sizes.

On the Road

« Prospections spéculatives et explorations raisonnées confèrent à l'œuvre céramique de Nathalie Domingo une mystérieuse et délicate finesse. La relation complice et intime entretenue avec la matière semble, petit à petit, s'être imposée comme l'objet même de son expression artistique.

Et puis, il y a peu, la céramiste découvre fortuitement une photographie de Darko Bandic. La prise de vue, aérienne mais rapprochée, révèle des champs, des cultures, un pylône électrique et une longue route empruntée par des milliers d'hommes, de femmes, d'enfants... Pris à l'automne 2015, le cliché rapporte la longue marche des migrants, dérouterés de la frontière hongroise. Image fixe et saisissante, cet instantané témoigne de la tragédie.

L'art ne demeure pas étranger à la réalité. Profondément touchée, Nathalie Domingo consacre alors toute son acuité céramique à de nouvelles pièces. De fragiles petits éléments de porcelaine, tous différents, frêles silhouettes, délicatement façonnées, assemblées, massées composent un mouvement, une vague, une marche irréaliste.

Troublante, paradoxale, On the road ne représente pas le monde. Elle manifeste l'émotion de la céramiste tout en renfermant en elle-même son contenu. Offerte à notre regard, elle exprime d'intangibles sentiments, mais autorise aussi la projection, l'interprétation, la contemplation.

Par sa pratique singulière de la porcelaine, sa discipline formelle et technique, son attention à la fragilité des choses, Nathalie Domingo partage avec une grande sensibilité la manière dont elle s'approprie le monde. »

Variation DR: Paper porcelain tableau - 2019-004

Variation DR (detail)

Variation DR

Nathalie Domingo and porcelain have been engaged in an intimate exchange for some time now. While the ceramic artist senses, invents, experiments, imposes, or rectifies, the chosen material interacts; porcelain reveals itself, at times rebellious and unpredictable, at times docile and generous. Beyond gesture and material, creating requires paying attention to oneself and to the world. Sometimes, a memory, the resurgence of a past experience, appears fortuitously. The artist is the one who chooses and embraces it in order to better explore it. Like a secret shared, Nathalie Domingo reveals a small sliver of childhood, modest and precious. "As a young child, I had an experience of art without any particular artistic intention. I discovered paint-by-numbers, invented by the American Dan Robbins. I certainly didn't stumble into painting! But all of those tiny pre-drawn surfaces, each constituting a tiny numbered area, were an unexpected and calming visual enchantment." Each of Nathalie Domingo's new creations demonstrates a surprising engagement that balances science, attention to technique, and the adventure of trailblazing inspiration.

Entitled Variation DR, the new paper porcelain tableaux, offered to our gaze, seem to have erased all trace of their origin as well as their patient construction. Upon more careful examination, the movement is revealed, the gesture glimpsed. Guided by the hand, a (common) thread settles on a white sheet of paper porcelain. It composes permutations of surfaces, made up of curves and counter-curves that the roller delicately prints in the porcelain. Indentations, raised designs, and openings are finely etched into the sheet. Porcelain beads punctuate the composition. Hollows and projections intercept the light, sketching joyful shadows. With delicate persistence, Nathalie Domingo creates precious graphic bas reliefs. The Variations DR call for "a tactile gaze" - if such a thing exists. It is up to the viewers to "touch them with their eyes" and to allow the aesthetic emotion to emerge.
